Celebration!

Who enjoys celebration? All those who have been involved.

One is a lonely number; there is joy in unity. Through teamwork, we feel strength, encouragement and support — and success is realized by one and all.

Taylor University's well-being through the years has been dependent upon how God has used His people . While various individuals have been the team leaders, it has been the total team effort that has produced the many victories.

Our magazine cover explodes with the excitement that results from teamwork. We celebrate the excitement experienced all across campus, for our success is generated by the teamwork of students, faculty and staff. Our success also extends beyond our "village border" through the efforts of our alumni, parents and friends around the world.

As you read through this magazine, I trust you will sense our excitment. Please join in our celebration, too, for our continued success depends upon the teamwork of you who are members of the Taylor University Family.

Cruise your local supermarket or discount store and you'll see the promises splashed throughout the aisles like seashells on a wave-swept shoreline -- Bigger, Stronger, Faster, Longer-Lasting, Now-Better-Than-Ever, and, of course, the ever-famous New-and-Improved.

Those are labels we could have slapped on this issue of the Taylor University Magazine, for we made a promise last spring that this issue would be all of the above. The consumer never knows whether the labels are accurate until he tries the product -- and we trust that is what you will do with this issue.

We are obviously Bigger, having expanded from 28 pages to 48 pages and a four-color cover; we believe we are Stronger by now including the views and insights of nearly a dozen authors each issue; we are Faster, now coming to you quarterly rather than three times per year; and we trust we are Longer-Lasting by providing you with more interesting news and features to read in a more cosmetically-appealing wrapper.

Above all, we feel we are Now-Better-Than-Ever. This is the largest magazine ever produced by Taylor University, and one of the largest regular publications published by any college or university. Most importantly, it is a fitting step in a long and illustrious career of one the nation's premier college magazines. Taylor University was one of the first institutions of higher education to see the need for a magazine to servce its constituency. In 1963, Will Cleveland, for 29 years the editor of Taylor's publications, established the magazine as a vehicle for informing and entertaining the Taylor Family; in 1968, he published a four-color photograph on the cover -- unheard of in that day for a college publication. Now, as colleges across the country are for the first time producing 16-page and 24-page magazines, Taylor University has seen the need to expand in quantity and quality.

We have stories to tell -- stories such as a $500,000 grant awarded by Lilly Endowment for a new telecommunications facility, one of the featured articles in our new News & Information section. We have history to share -- history such as the fact that the 1898 Gem yearbook was sent to and received personally by President William McKinley, one of the interesting notes found in our new Pages In History section. We have facts to pass along -- facts about our alumni that can be found in our redesigned Alumni Notes section.

And we have tales about our alumni -- tales such as the article in this issue about Rev. Robert 'Tiny' Davis '58 who has had to give up the ministry while courageously battling Alzheimer's Disease. Bob and his wife Betty (Godsey '58) say they have 'no secrets.' "When we went into the ministry, we agreed our lives would not be lived in a goldfish bowl," Betty says. "Our lives are lived for the Lord, always have been and still are now." Adds Bob: "I have peace about the situation. I don't understand it, but I've accepted what God has sent my way." Read about them in our Alumni Spotlight.

We celebrate in this issue, our annual giving edition. Taylor University reached all financial goals during 1986-87, thanks to the people listed in the following pages. We are also excited about being named the seventh-best liberal arts college in the Midwest by U.S. News & World Report in its October 26 issue -- something we'll tell you more about in our next issue.

Read, enjoy, and celebrate with us our excitement. Like the magazine, Taylor University continues to grow, becoming Bigger, Better, and Stronger while serving Christian Higher Education.

Cosgrove's book wins Editor's Choice award from Campus Life

Mark Cosgrove, professor of psychology, award-winning author

Too often the humanities and science are separated. Literature speaks in symbolism and metaphor; the scientific world speaks in statistics and hard data.

Yet Dr. Mark Cosgrove, trained in physiological psychology, includes both worlds in his life. He looks at scientific research not as cold and impersonal, but as fascinating.

"Biology is fascinating," says Cosgrove, professor of psychology at Taylor University. "God's world is interesting. I'm captured by the images in biology."

It was this attraction that led him to write The Amazing Body Human: God's Design for Personhood. Cosgrove was looking for biological examples to make a

Students provide the 'personal touch' needed in admissions effort

This year, 15 students (left) are giving their 'personal touch' to the admissions effort at Taylor University. It's a program that has been in place many years; the admissions office discovered long ago that college students often relate better to high school recruits.

"Six or seven years ago we saw a need to have a group of students help in the admissions process. We felt we needed a group of students who would be deeply committed to what we were doing," says Herb Frye, dean of admissions and former campus visitation coordinator.

Today, 15 Taylor University students form a group called the Personal Touch staff. Their primary responsibility is to promote Taylor University and recruit prospective students.

Their job description calls the group a "paraprofessional admissions staff" who "personalize the prospective student's visit to the Taylor community and participate in selected on-campus and off-campus activities."

These activities include hosting prospective students, giving campus tours, attending college fairs, assisting during campus visitation days and participating in phonathons, a telemarketing plan where prospective students are contacted and given personal attention.

"They are the liaison, and since students relate to students, we use them to help answer questions and encourage prospective students to follow through with their applications," says Joyce Helyer, campus visitation coordinator.

"The team, in a sense, is in sales, and because we want to better equip them in their role, each student is carefully selected and given training in every aspect of their responsibility," she adds.

Each staff member is drilled in essential facts about Taylor University, such as its history and admission requirements. They also are instructed in dressing appropriately, giving campus tours and setting up displays during college fairs. All of this information is compiled in a resource handbook which has been drawn Word of Taylor University is spread 'round the world by the school's alumni, friends and parents of students. That's how junior Joel Durkovic (right) learned of the school and its highly-regarded computer science program – while he was in Guatemala! Joel's story proves how graduates can serve as important ambassadors for Taylor University.

Computers, friends' advice, bring Joel Durkovic to Taylor University

It only makes sense that Joel Durkovic is a student interviewer with the admissions staff, sharing his views of Taylor University with visitors to the campus.

After all, it was the Taylor students he encountered during his adolescent years that brought him off the volcanoes and out of the jungles of Guatemala and into Upland, Indiana, for his college education.

Not that Joel lived on volcanoes or in jungles, but he considers his treks into these often-uncharted regions of Guatemala as some of the greatest experiences of his life. His parents are missionaries with the Lutheran Church.

It was the Union Church in Guatemala, a church comprised of American missionaries, where Joel first heard of Taylor University through his youth director, Brad Pontius '77. Another friend in Guatemala who spread the word about a Taylor education was Pam McRae '87. "She really talked it up," Joel says of Pam's winning sales pitch. "But after your

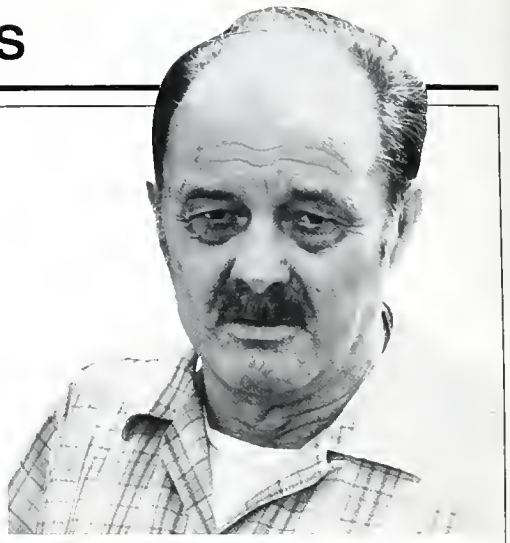
Whitenacks' generosity forms base for Christian ministry scholarship



When D.V. Whitenack decided to come to Taylor University in 1926, he had all of $5 in his pocket and a promise from the college's president that a job was awaiting him.

Over six decades later, Richard E. Whitenack, son of the Rev. D.V. and the late Mildred (Kellar x27) Whitenack, has returned that favor granted his father by Taylor University — and in a grand way.

Richard Whitenack has given Taylor University $96,000 to begin the Richard E. Whitenack Memorial Scholarship which will assist students training for involvement in Christian ministry.

"We feel we owe very much to Taylor because they helped us to come here when we had nothing," Rev. D.V. Whitenack says. He relates the tale of how he wanted to come to Taylor University but had only five dollars; President Monroe Vayhinger told the young man to come anyway, that he would find a job for Whitenack that would assist him in paying for his schooling and help lead him to his goal of entering the ministry.

D.V. Whitenack served as a Methodist minister for 55 years, 42 years full-time; during those three-score years, he has maintained his evangelical fervor. Working throughout northwest Ohio, Rev. D.V. Whitenack sought growth and development within the church and united several small churches. He first retired in 1971, retired fully in 1982, and now lives in Toledo.

Richard Whitenack served in the army in 1945-46; afterwards, he worked for a railroad company, retiring in 1982. Richard's father has helped him manage his money, and D.V. Whitenack considers the scholarship a tribute to Richard and his desire to help others.

Richard Whitenack (above), associated with Taylor University only through his father and mother, D.V. '26 and the late Mildred (Kellar x27) Whitenack (left) and two sisters who attended the school, made a major gift to the institution this summer. The Richard Whitenack Memorial Scholarship will assist students preparing for service in Christian ministry.

The Richard E. Whitenack Memorial Scholarship will assist students who, like D.V. Whitenack, desire to enter Christian ministry but have financial need. "We want to encourage them to go into the Christian ministry," D.V. Whitenack says. "We would like for the scholarship to go to these students who need assistance while preparing for some form of Christian ministry."

The scholarship becomes active once the fund grows to $100,000 within the next year. An annual award, the scholarship may be granted each year to more than one student. – KB

Keller leaves Taylor

Ron Keller, a utility player during his 21 years of service, has left Taylor University.

Keller, who held 10 different titles in student affairs, admissions, Wandering Wheels and institutional relations, is now serving as president of Christian Service Foundation, a subsidiary of the Evangelical Mennonite Church, as well as monitoring 27 EMC churches in a church growth project. Keller is also serving as vice president for development of the Church Growth Center in northern Indiana.

Keller most recently was director of church relations.

Students' parents enjoy Taylor-made weekend spent with the kids

"My parents came to see me!" says junior Cama Cooper as she re-enters the auditorium following intermission of the Jerome Hines concert, and a smile crosses her face. It is a scene replayed by other students whose parents attended Parents' Weekend from Oct. 2-4.

For some it was a long-awaited visit that they had planned weeks ago. Such was the case for Frank and Linda Walker, parents of sophomore Candy Walker.

"We really would like to go to the Jerome Hines concert, but Candy isn't interested in activities like that. We came just to spend time with our daughter and go shopping with her. This is how we relax after our heavy work-week," said Mr. Walker; the family is from Akron, Illinois.

Mrs. Mary Ann Wiles from Wabash, Indiana, is the mother of senior Susan Wiles, who lives off-campus; she shares this sentiment. "I'm only here for a day. I've seen Susan's apartment and really like it," she said. "We're going to head on in to Marion and maybe do some shopping. I'm not too thrilled about it, but that's what the girls want to do."

For others it was just another occasion to pay Taylor a visit and participate in the activities planned for them with their college student.

Tad Atkinson's mother lives in Fort Wayne and sees her son, a junior, occasionally over the weekends. "I'm here just for the day," said Mrs. Atkinson, who arrived Saturday. "I'm really looking forward to attending the Jerome Hines concert with Tad, then I'll be leaving."

Activities eagerly anticipated by most parents were the faculty coffees — times set aside for faculty and parents to get acquainted.

"One issue that arose frequently was the matter of job opportunities available for sons and daughters," says Bob Benjamin, associate professor of accounting.

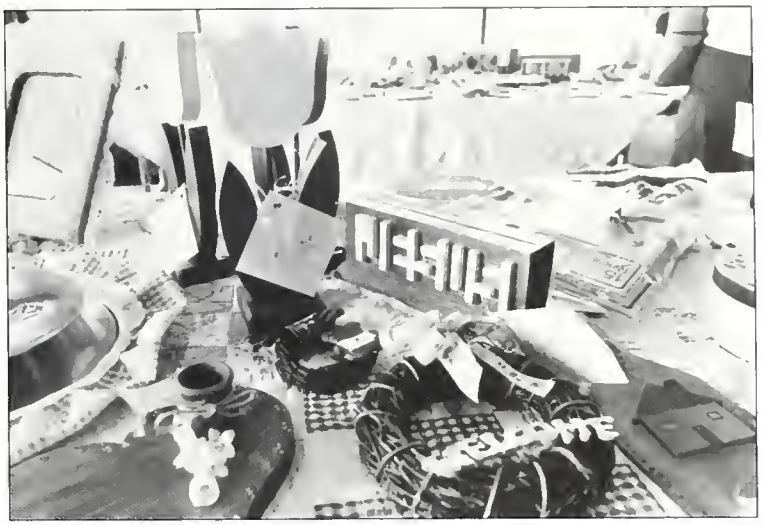
"My dad wanted to meet every prof possible. He joked that if they didn't know me, they would after he's through with them!" laughed sophomore Emily Alexander.

Parents of Taylor's football players had an added incentive in coming for Parents' Weekend. A special invitation was sent requesting their presence at the football field where they were to be publicly introduced to the spectators before the game.

"There was a good turnout. We had about 100 parents, family members and friends represented there," said Bill Bauer, assistant football coach, commenting on the 15-year-old tradition at Taylor University.

"My parents didn't come for the weekend, but California is a little far away to travel all the way here," said Mark Booth, flanker on the football team.

All too quickly, Parents' Weekend came and went. About 1,000 parents were a part of the activities for this year. For those who were not present, there's next year to join in the annual Parents' Weekend festivities. -- PT



The second annual Parents' Association craft sale went beyond any and all expectations, bringing in over $8,000 in sales and donations. Crafts of all kinds (left) were displayed and sold during Parents' Weekend; the money netted will go to the Student Assistance Fund.

Parents' Association craft sale nets over $8,000 for Taylor's Student Assistance Fund

A craft sale sponsored by the Parents' Association over Parents' Weekend brought in over $8,200 -- money which will be put to good use in the Student Assistance Fund.

The fund is available to students who have emergency financial needs; these needs may be made known to the health center or the Center for Student Development.

Parents and others made crafts for the sale or sent donations; a clock, handmade by President Kesler, sold for $905.

Leon Shaffer '37 and his wife Virginia (Longnecker '41) greet Jean Bergwall (right), wife of the late Evan Bergwall, Sr., a former president of Taylor. Jean Bergwall spoke during Homecoming's Sunday Breakfast and Devotions service; later that morning, the banquet room in the Hodson Dining Commons was named in honor of Evan Bergwall during a special dedication service.

Trainer's life more than ice buckets, cloth tape

The fall season is the busiest time of the sports year for an athletic trainer, and Jeff Marsee has had his hands full right from the start. Marsee (left, in cap) tends to the injuries of sophomore center Nathan Bartow during the Parents' Weekend victory over Kalamazoo College.

He's considered a jack-of-all-trades, and he's definitely a man-for-all-seasons.

He's Jeff Marsee, and on top of being an athletic trainer and educator, he's finding himself performing the duties of psychologist and repairman on the side.

Most importantly for Taylor University, he fills a new and very important position on the school's athletic staff. Never before has Taylor University hired a full-time athletic trainer, and Jeff Marsee is finding the challenge of establishing a new program exhilarating.

Unfortunately, he's establishing that program in the midst of a seven-sport fall season, and both basketball teams began their training in early October. That means Jeff Marsee is on the go from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday through Friday, and he spends every Saturday with the football team. "You almost have to start full-bore from the beginning — from the educational side as well as the recruiting side," Marsee says. "I'm teaching students how to be athletic trainers in addition to covering the high-incident sports — football, soccer and basketball."

It's the educational aspect that brought Marsee to Taylor University. On top of treating injuries, he is instructing a staff of students in the ways of the athletic trainer, and Taylor University will now offer an internship in athletic training. Add to that teaching two Fitness for Life courses, and you have one very busy fall schedule for Jeff Marsee. He will also teach weight training and adapted physical education (how to teach physical education to handicapped students) next semester.

"Obviously, you have to put a lot into the job, but you also get a lot out of it," Marsee says. "It's daily that coaches pat me on the back, or tell me to take care of myself and get some rest -- it's always something positive."

Marsee's first step at Taylor University was to improve the physical aspects of the training room. He brought with him three treatment tables, four training tables, a muscle stimulation machine, and a machine that increases body temperature to assist blood flow; he plans on acquiring an Iso-Kinetic machine to assist with rehabilitation of injuries.

He also developed a policies and procedures handbook for his student trainers as well as several important forms. "When you've been involved in a comprehensive program, you learn that legalities unfortunately come into play," Marsee says. "I'm sure the coaches were a little frightened when I said I was going to document everything."

That documentation includes a daily record of treatment in the training room; a new, more thorough physical examination form, on record in the athletic office and at the health center; and an injury treatment form which is sent with any athlete treated by a physician, with copies retained by the doctor, the athletic office, and Taylor's health center. "We've had excellent response," Marsee says, and he considers the already-established solid communications link between himself and the health center as another important aspect in building an athletic training program.

Marsee has already treated everything from serious joint injuries to broken glasses — thus the repairman's function in a trainer's life. The psychologist portion comes into play when he has to assure an athlete that placing his foot into a bucket of water along with rubber pads pulsating with electric current — one of the ways in which the muscle stimulation machine, a high-tech piece of equipment, is properly utilized -- will help him. As an

Oh, brother! Football success runs in family

They wear numbers 16, 46, 56, 53, 45 and 1, and they have more in common than playing for the Taylor University football team.

The Trojans have three sets of brothers playing the great American contact sport this season — an oddity, of sorts. Junior defensive tackle Lee Brookshire is joined by sophomore brother Lance, a linebacker; junior linebacker Larry Phelps has freshman brother Buzz behind him in the backfield; and senior Psychology stigma past; counseling center offers students vital assistance

Some come for one session, others come weekly. In all, nearly 150 individual students visit Taylor University's counseling center for professional assistance each academic year.

It's proof positive that psychological counseling is no longer a taboo practice to be avoided by "stable" people — especially Christians. Today, professional counseling for emotional difficulties is considered to be in the same league with seeing a doctor for physical injuries or a minister for spiritual problems.

"Over the past 20 years, the stigma has disappeared," says Dr. David Aycock, university psychologist and director of Taylor University's counseling center. "A Christian going to see a psychologist is not an admission of bankrupt spirituality as it once was."

Emotional difficulties are not something to be ashamed of — for the Christian or for any person, Aycock says. "Christians often feel they've sinned if they encounter emotional problems," he says. "But the problems we hear about in the counseling center, there's no sin on the part of the kids; they're the victims."

There is no cost to students for counseling at Taylor University. Each year, over 100 new students arrive at the counseling center for assistance; on top of that, over 25 students from the previous year continue their sessions with Aycock.

"It's purely voluntary, only available to students, and everything is kept completely confidential," Aycock adds. "We don't force people to come to the counseling center." Students may call for an appointment or simply present themselves in the counseling center, located in the basement of the Rediger Chapel/Auditorium. Aycock performs an initial interview to ascertain how the student's needs may best be met.

Counseling has gained importance because of the "tremendous emotional upheaval" in today's world, Aycock says. "Just living in our culture provides encounters with so many potential problems," he explains. "Good kids have problems, too. At the counseling center, we try our best to assist with those problems in a way that integrates spiritual values and scientific resources. We use psychology and theology as allies — not as foes."

Aycock is well-versed in both. He was a theology and psychology major at Tennessee Temple University and received both his master's degree and doctorate at Georgia State University in counseling psychology. During those post-graduate years, much of his work was performed in a companion program at the Psychological Studies Institute, which offers programs in Christian counseling. Aycock has reached the top-tier of licensing in the State of Indiana.

On top of his counseling schedule, Aycock engages in about 200 faculty consultations each year and holds a busy on and off-campus speaking schedule.

That doesn't mean students are run through a psychological assembly line. "We're holistic," Aycock explains. "You have to fine-tune emotional health just as you do physical health and spiritual health. We believe in growth experiences — we don't just patch students up so they can limp along." -- KB

Aycock's book teaches us how to encourage one another

The biblical mandate to "encourage one another daily" gains importance daily as the world in which we live fosters more and more discouragement.

Dr. David Aycock, university psychologist, provides practical strategies for strengthening relationships and sharpening sensitivity skills in his recently-published book, The Healing Art of Encouragement. It is published by Victor Books as part of their Adult Elective Series; a review appears in Moody Monthly's November issue.

"It's written for the general public," says Aycock. "Basically, it's a how-to book on encouragement. There are a number of scriptures telling us to build each other up, and this is a book that describes why that is needed and how to do it."

Dr. David Aycock

Aycock wrote the book during the summer of 1986. Though he has authored numerous professional articles for magazines, The Healing Art of Encouragement is his first

Nace takes charge of PROBE and placement

Tim Nace (right) joined Taylor University this past summer after working at Greenville College in Illinois.

Two months to prepare for over 500 students.

That was the reality facing Tim Nace, Taylor University's new director of the PROBE program for first-time students. And while he was attacking this venture for the first time, Nace was also immersing himself in his duties as director of placement.

It is safe to report that both programs are thriving. Nace humbly attributes that success to the organization of his predecessor, Wendy Koons, and the assistance of his superior, Walt Campbell, and his secretary, Sharon

'Dream of Distinction' nets Taylor $500,000 from Lilly Endowment

A Dream of Distinction has come true, and Taylor University is far the better for it, thanks to Lilly Endowment, Inc.

Taylor University was one of 51 independent colleges selected by the Indianapolis-based charitable foundation to receive a matching grant for a major investment in its campus. With this Dream of Distinction award, the institution plans to develop an innovative telecommunications program.

Included will be a telecommunications instructional delivery system designed to serve students in all academic programs through an intra-campus network. This system also will be linked to inter-campus systems such as Indiana Higher Education Telecommunications System (IHETS).

To establish this system, a new learning laboratory for Taylor University's mass communications studies, including studio and support space, must be built as well as furnished with new equipment for television and radio production and post-production.

The achievement of this dream will make Taylor University a distinctive place to study by increasing the quality and variety of available learning resources, by moving a developing mass communications program to its next level of maturity, and by providing the means of disseminating internally-produced programming to other educational settings. Total project costs are estimated at $1 million. If Taylor University successfully raises $500,000 for the project over the next two years, Lilly Endowment will provide a matching $500,000.

Last fall, Lilly Endowment challenged the 32 independent, four-year accredited undergraduate colleges and universities in Indiana and the 40 affiliated with the United Negro College Fund (UNCF) to dream of a major capital project or other one-time investment that could significantly raise the quality and distinctiveness of their academic or campus offerings. Sixty-six schools submitted proposals, and independent judges selected proposals from 51 schools to receive awards. Assuming all meet their fund-raising goals, the Endowment will divide a total of $24.3 million between the two groups. -- KB psychological point about God. The wealth of examples he found persuaded him to abandon his original project and spend five months in concentrated biological research.

"Man is the only creature who cannot drink and breathe at the same time," Cosgrove relates. "Man is the only creature with both hands and feet; man is the only creature with a preference for the right hand; man outlives every creature on the planet . . . except for trees and an occasional tortoise."

While these are interesting tidbits of knowledge, an understanding of these physiological implications points to an uniqueness in man that can only be explained in terms of a higher purpose. Because of Cosgrove's physiological background, he feels comfortable reading scientific data, but his psychological interest in human nature pushes him to interpret that data. "Man is not merely super-animalhood," Cosgrove explains, "but the uniqueness of personhood — values, morals, suffering — makes it difficult to accept the notion that there is no personal God."

The Amazing Body Human is an interesting, readable look at data with explanation that forces the reader to focus upon the implications of personhood. "I've always had an apologetic bent," Cosgrove says, "to explain or defend the biblical world view from within the world of data."

While writing about this world of data unfamiliar to many of his readers, Cosgrove began to feel what he describes as "the power of writing, the need to communicate well, the power to convey truth in written word." Cosgrove understands that the writing itself is almost as important as the subject; during the process of writing The Amazing Body Human, he felt the importance of crafting. "I feel as good about a well-crafted paragraph as I do the ideas or apologetics," he says.

This fervor for good writing makes Cosgrove especially appreciative of the Campus Life Book of the Year Award presented to him for The Amazing Body Human — the Editor's Choice Award. "Editors are good writers themselves and are more critical of what they read," Cosgrove says. "They look at the writing and the intellectual merit."

Cosgrove recently finished a book, now being published, on the subject of anger; it is a biblical approach to solving our anger problems. He is currently conducting research for another book that will deal with the longings of the human soul, tentatively titled Dancing in the

Trustees' Corner

Dr. Joseph D. Brain '61, professor of physiology
Harvard University School of Public Health

Dr. Joseph David Brain '61, has been a member of the Taylor University Board of Trustees since 1985. He is professor of physiology, director of the respiratory biology program, and director of the pulmonary specialized center of research at Harvard University School of Public Health.

This summer, Dr. Brain was named the new Cecil K. and Philip Drinker Professor of Environmental Physiology; the Harvard professorship honors brothers who collaborated on breakthrough studies of the respiratory tract as the route of absorption of toxic dust and fumes.

Dr. Brain is recognized as one of the world's authorities on pulmonary macrophages and the pathogenesis of environmental lung disease. He is also a specialist on the deposition and fate of inhaled particles in the lungs and the effect of breathing patterns, exercise and lung disease on the retention of aerosols.

As director of the respiratory biology program since 1981, Dr. Brain leads seven faculty and 20 post-doctoral fellows and graduate students in research projects whose combined annual budgets total $3 million.

Since graduating summa cum laude with a degree in physics from Taylor University in 1961, Brain has earned a master's degree in applied physics from Harvard University, division of engineering and applied physics; a master's degree in radiological hygiene from Harvard University, school of public health; and a doctorate in physiology, also from Harvard's school of public health.

Dr. Brain is married to the former Judy Boll '61; the couple has three sons — Dow Stamford 20, Derek Jason 18, and Jason Matthew 13. The family lives in Needham, Massachusetts.

90% retention rate: Students register good impressions of Taylor

Faculty and staff at Taylor University take a personal interest in the students, and it pays off.

"They know what Taylor University is about and what it is committed to," says Dr. Richard Stanislaw, vice president for academic affairs. "When students come here and look Taylor over, they get a good first impression and are drawn to it. I believe that first impressions are real impressions."

Statistics back up the reasoning, for data indicate the vast majority of students remain at Taylor University rather than transfering. From the fall of 1986 to the fall of 1987, 73% of the freshman class became sophomores, 93% of the sophomore class became juniors, and 97% of the junior class became seniors. The overall retention rate is just under 90%. According to Stanislaw, these figures, in comparison to retention figures from other schools, both public and private, indicate that Taylor University has an unusually high retention rate. It's a retention rate that has been maintained for the past decade, too.

Herb Frye, dean of admissions, echoes this sentiment. "We give students a clear and honest picture of Taylor University," he says. "Students enroll because they like what they see. More importantly, they eventually realize that Taylor University is exactly what it presents itself to be and are not disillusioned by that first impression."

Students also "persist" in coming back to Taylor University because of the guidance and counseling that is made so readily available to each student, Stanislaw suggests. Freshman open their college career with Welcome Weekend, part of the freshmen orientation program used to help them adjust to a new environment, which has been implemented since 1977. The Center for Student Development and Services has facilities available to provide good student services, and hall directors carry this care and concern into the residence halls, Stanislaw adds.

One other factor that cannot be overlooked is the presence of President Jay Kesler, who has been president of Taylor University since 1985 and a major attraction of the university.

"Dr. Kesler 'sparks' our campus and unites us," says Frye. "He personifies Taylor University." -- PT published book. Oddly enough, his most recent published article, co-authored with four other psychologists, was entitled "Stress Coping: A Qualitative Synthesis with Implications for Treatment;" it appeared in the October, 1986, issue of The Counseling Psychologist, a monthly publication sent to all counseling psychologists in the nation, dealt entirely with analysis of scientific data, and was widely acclaimed within the counseling field. Thus, The Healing Art of Encouragement, being a practical application piece, was quite a turn-around for David Aycock, author.

But translating professional literature into practical, every-day living techniques is the most important aspect of his occupation, Aycock feels. "In reality, that's what makes me more than a scientist — I'm a scientist/practitioner," he says. "I believe I'm a good scientist, but I go beyond that and help people by applying this information to their lives."

New equipment, training distinguish AI program as one of nation's best Dave Lavin, a senior computer science major, receives instruction from Dr. Timothy Diller, associate professor of information sciences, on operating the TI Explorer Machine (left). The TI Explorer supports work on expert systems for pojects such as PALLM.

Recent grants have catapulted the information sciences artificial intelligence (AI) program into a position of prominence in training students to develop expert systems.

An expert system is a software package that can reason much like a human. It therefore aids in decision-making in a specialized area because of the human expertise it contains. An expert system is developed by a knowledge engineer who extracts the expertise from a human and represents it in a form which allows abstract reasoning.

Last year, PALLM, Inc., in conjunction with the Indiana Corporation for Science and Technology (both based in Indianapolis) provided Taylor University with a grant of $60,000. With this grant, the information sciences department acquired hardware, software and training used to create expert systems.

Four members from the information sciences department were trained in the use of ART, an Automated Reasoning Tool used to write expert systems. A second course in expert systems was immediately developed at Taylor University, and prototype development projects were established with PALLM, Merchants Bank, Ernst & Whinney, and Delco Electronics.

This year, the National Science Foundation awarded Taylor University a matching grant of $30,500 to augment the AI laboratory. This grant is providing additional equipment which will strengthen the expert systems and natural language processing courses, as well as allowing additional projects to be undertaken with surrounding businesses.

Established in 1982, the AI program now provides seven courses in artificial intelligence and involves five faculty and about 30 students. Taylor University is one of the few undergraduate universities in the United States that has\the breadth of courses of the specialization in expert systems afforded through the ART environment, the trained faculty, and the external corporate projects. — TD

Hopkins.

Another component that has made Probe successful for Nace and his half-thousand new students is the able work of the student leaders. "I've worked with student leaders before," Nace says, a knowing tone in his voice. He joined Taylor University after working in student development at Greenville College.

"I've been blessed with 65 very capable student leaders who have done an excellent job," Nace says. "I'm very impressed with the students at Taylor. They have commitment and dedication, and not only to their own lives, but to the lives of others. I think their desire to serve the community is admirable."

Nace is not only impressed with the students, but also with the PROBE program itself. He recently attended a seminar in which a program called University 101 — the Freshman Year Experience, created by John Gardner at the University of South Carolina, was used as a model for other colleges. Nace found the University 101 program similar in nearly every way to Taylor's Probe program and Freshman Seminar course. "As far as the country's best is concerned, I feel we're comparable, if not the best ourselves," Nace says.

Placement is an area where Nace plans to make modifications, although he considers the program to have "good foundations." Nace plans to improve organization, strengthen and increase contacts with alumni, initiate contacts with new businesses, and transfer existing hard data to a computer database. For now, he is attempting to learn more from other college programs and apply their strong points at Taylor University. -- KB athletic trainer, Marsee must gain the athletes' trust in treating their injuries.

A biology major while at Carson-Newman College, Marsee stumbled into athletic training by accident. Having arrived early for his freshman year, Marsee was hanging around the gym and became interested in what the student athletic trainers were doing. He became involved in the program, studied under the certified athletic trainer the college hired his sophomore year, and later earned his master's degree in physical education/ athletic training from Western Michigan University.

Marsee is certified by the National Athletic Trainers Association, a procedure which requires earning a bachelor's degree, taking numerous specialized courses and emergency medical training, and passing a national examination that has a 40% failure rate. This certification allows him to practice in an educational setting, although athletic trainers are being hired in business and industry as well as in clinical settings. Marsee's goal is to earn a doctorate in educational psychology. – KB freshman year, I've found you can't say anything bad about Taylor — it's all good."

During one summer job, Joel found himself working alongside a team of Taylor students in Guatemala, and another seed was planted. "I saw how neat they were, and I was curious to see what motivated them, how they had come to be the way they were," Joel says.

His senior year was spent at a private secular school in North Carolina; though he had already applied to Furman, he decided to visit Taylor University that fall. "The thing that really impressed me the most was the students and how friendly they were," he says. "You know, you hear that all the time, but the people here at Taylor make you feel so comfortable.

"I was looking for academics, and Taylor had a much better computer science program than Furman. Taylor was expensive, but the Lord miraculously worked out a way for me to come here."

Now a junior computer science major, Joel has already had one practicum experience with a major business firm in Chicago and plans an internship this summer. "I'd like to see how I could use computers some other way — maybe in missions," Joel says. And he is excited to see where God will use him, knowing that computers can be applied to nearly every field, be it business, missions, or somewhere in between. "Taylor's computer science program started many years ago and has come a long way. It's one of the few undergraduate schools with an artificial intelligence program," Joel remarks. "It's probably the best Christian school in computer science."

Joel has been involved in soccer and concert band; he continues to play in the brass ensemble and now sings in the All-In-One a cappella quartet. And he continues to serve admissions as a member of the Personal Touch staff, and for good reasons.

"I like people," Joel says. "I want to tell them why Taylor has been special for me, and I want to see students go to a school where they belong. Not to say Taylor is the place for everyone, because it isn't. But I want to share what I've gained here and see where that leads them." -- KB wide receiver Brian Doss is on the end of passes thrown by brother Kevin, a freshman quarterback.

'Brothers'

These three sets of brothers are in part responsible for the early-season success of the Taylor University football team. The Trojans opened the year with four consecutive wins — the team's best start in 17 years — and was ranked 20th in the NAIA poll. Included in the string was a 29-28 come-from-behind victory over Anderson University, the Trojans scoring 15 points in the final five minutes.

Taylor football, 1987 style, is a far cry from the annual suffering each fall during the 1970s and early 1980s when the Trojans lost many more games than they won. "We had lost that winning tradition," says Lee Brookshire, Taylor's hulking 240-pound stabilizer on the defensive line. "No one expected to win."

Brian Doss, with four years of experience at Taylor, attributes the turn-around to Coach Jim Law's recruiting style. Law has been pulling players from successful high school programs, and "When you come from a winning school," Doss says, "you expect to be a winner wherever you go. It's an attitude."

An example is Lance Brookshire, whose Oak Hill High School football teams were 33-4 during his four years, including a conference championship and an Indiana state title. "When you're winning, you want to keep succeeding," Lance Brookshire says. "You don't want to let the feeling go."

It was the taste of victory that prompted Buzz Phelps to play football at Taylor. "When we started winning my last couple years of high school, I got to like the intensity of the game and the feeling of winning," Buzz says.

"In high school, he played because I played, and because our father played," Larry explains. "I was kind of surprised when he decided to play football at college. But I was happy, because we've never played on the same team before."

That same eagerness to play football together carries over to the Brookshire and Doss brothers, as well. "We played on the same team in high school, but it's been more fun at Taylor, 'cause we're both playing defense," Lee Brookshire says. "In high school, I played defense, but Lance played offense."

And who won the high school scrimmage matchups? Both brothers laugh, and a knowing look passes between them. "We'd better not say," Lance, the smaller of the two by three inches and 75 pounds, says in all seriousness, " 'cause I wouldn't want to embarrass Lee."

Perhaps the most celebrated brother combination is Kevin and Brian Doss. The two have become a much-heralded passing tandem for the Trojans, but they downplay their success. "I have a good feel for his moves, for his patterns," Kevin says of his brother, "but when he's on the field, he's just another receiver. The defense dictates where I'm going to throw the ball."

"He definitely doesn't look for me first on the field," Brian says, needling Kevin, "because there have been many times when I've been wide open and he doesn't throw to me."

Kevin simply grins and shakes his head. "Believe me, I've heard about it every time."

Kevin planned on studying architecture at Miami University -- no football -- but plans changed. Now the freshman quarterback receives a lot of publicity while running and throwing for scores -- especially when Brian is involved.

Success and the accompanying publicity isn't all bad, though. The brothers are enjoying victory. "We come from a small school, and football's a big thing in our town," Larry Phelps says, adding his parents drive three hours to see home games. "There's a lot of support for us at home, because not many kids from our town play college athletics. To see us both having success means a lot to our family."

The success means a lot to Taylor University, too. Though winning has long been a tradition with the athletic program, it's nice to see success return to the football team after a decade of defeat. The Doss, Brookshire and Phelps brothers are helping to re-establish that winning tradition. -- KB

Taylor Christian Life Conference

July 29-31, 1988

Featuring: Dr. Jay Kesler

Entire Taylor Family welcome!

Dr. Jay L. Kesler,
President

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

by Dr. Jay L. Kesler '58

I was sitting in my academic robe, cowl around my shoulders, the Taylor medallion against my chest with a little trickle of perspiration working its way down my temple from my "Martin Luther" hat when the young woman next to me leaned over and said, "What are they talking about? Has private education changed this much? What's all this talk about values, God and all got to do with it?" We were sitting together as part of the delegation inaugurating the new president of a high quality, church-related college. They would be scandalized to be called evangelical but have historic roots deep in the church. I tried not to disturb the speaker and simply smiled and nodded. She was persistent and said (as incidentally many people in a media age do as if the program is on T.V., and you can't disturb a television program by speaking or getting a sandwich), "I'm from a public university, and we just don't say these things. What's going on?"

She was an alumna of a southwestern university, representing them at the inauguration, and hadn't heard quotes from current books that for college presidents have become required reading. It would be for her something like listening to a sermon and never having heard of St. Paul. In higher education these days, several books are quoted so often that if you are not familiar with their phrases, presuppositions, and concerns, many of these meetings seem to be held in shorthand. The books of the moment are The Closing of the American Mind by Alan Bloom, Habits of the Heart by Robert Bellah, College, The Undergraduate Experience in America by Ernest Boyer, and, if you are an evangelical, Evangelicalism by David Hunter.

I took out a card and began to write these and a couple more current "buzz titles" for her. She caught the hint, and afterward I gave her my scribbled bibliography; we discussed the various speakers at this convocation and their rehearsal of the views of these books. (One of the speakers, in Joseph Biden fashion, forgot to identify his source though he quoted verbatim from one of them. Not all sinners are preachers and politicians.)

All of these books contain "hair shirt" pleas for a reversal of emphasis from narrowly-focused, functional education to broadly based, humanely tempered, literate, artistically enriched, historically aware, ethically committed, college curriculum. They further cry out for an abandonment of rampant individualism which manifests itself in divorce rates, crime in the streets, corporate greed, nationalistic jingoism, selfish yuppyism, crippling strikes, and an almost endless list of society's ills from AIDS to Zealotism.

Taylor isn't perfect — far from it. Our mission is, however, in sharp relief to the negative scenario developed by these authors. We find ourselves deeply in agreement with their desires for higher education and society. Our commitment to Christian liberal arts education becomes not simply an arbitrary decision to be Christian, classical or quaint. The historical commitment of Taylor University becomes in this current, focused analysis a commitment to the principles that challenge narrow utilitarianism, self-centered hedonism, and the chauvinism so deplored in these prophetic writings. We are committed to the only comprehensive answer to the national and global dilemma — a Christian world view. This sounds pompous and idealistic but, in fact, is the claim of the Christian gospel. Taylor then becomes not only a place to prepare youth to function in the world but a vital part of the Great Commission. Christian higher education becomes the forum in which the complex issues between the gospel message and the world order are stressed. To engage in this struggle without the Bible and Christ in the center is to fall short of being Christian; to suggest that we do it perfectly, or at times even very well, is unforgivable arrogance; but not to attempt to address these challenges is to accept the current hand-wringing status quo.

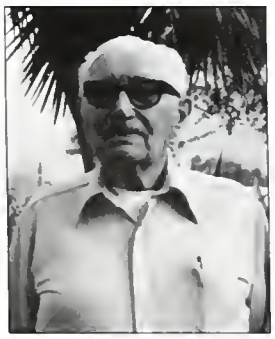
Rev. Roy Birkey '44 spent most of his life as a missionary for the Mennonite Conference in China. He was born in Groveland, Illinois, and married Elizabeth Klopfenstein. During their mission work in China, one of their two sons passed away.

Rev. Birkey had a true heart for Sammy Morris. He also remembers the days when the sanctification and holiness movements prevailed on Taylor's campus. Roy stated last March, "It was during one of those revivals that my life was completely changed, and I committed my life to serving Christ as a missionary."

Following his father's death in August, Rev. Birkey's surviving son Richard made a contribution to the Taylor Fund which will be used to help with financial aid and faculty salaries.



Rev. Roy Birkey '44

To approach the challenge without studying the historical antecedents in science, the arts, history, philosophy, theology, economics, and ethics is to impoverish the liberal arts. To indoctrinate without interaction, questioning, debate, and broad exposure is to violate education. Christian liberal arts education is, indeed, worth our time.

Our team effort to make Taylor University a truly outstanding institution is a most worthy mission, and the achievement of each goal on this long road is a justified source of excitement. Enlisting every reader of this column and a host of others who have not yet been energized is, I have decided, worthy of the investment of the rest of my life. Why? Really, does the axis of the world actually protrude from Upland, Indiana? No, of course not! Taylor University, and especially her President, does not bring meaning to this cause. Taylor University belongs, bone and sinew, to Jesus Christ who made the world. It is His cause that brings mandate, meaning, direction, and excitement to this mission. Read this issue with a deep gratitude to God for giving Taylor University a board, faculty, staff, alumni, and a host of parents and friends who have lifted their eyes to the huge challenge ahead to be obedient to the heavenly calling.

There is excitement at Taylor. We have lifted our eyes to address the challenges. This issue of the institutional magazine reports that the enrollment has exceeded all expectations,

Rev. Ray Squire '26 knows the value of Christian higher education through first-hand experience. Ray committed himself to serving Christ while at Taylor University and became a Methodist minister, serving most of his pastorates in California.

The Squires' Family Trust was established two years ago. It was set up to benefit Ray's church, his family, and Taylor University. He elected to be trustee of the family trust, even though Taylor was appointed manager of the trust funds.

"I want to do what I can to make sure that the Taylor experience is available to future students," Ray says. "That's why I am supporting Taylor." It's not surprising, then, that Ray has chosen Taylor's portion of the trust to go to the Taylor Endowment Fund. "I feel it is important that the type of opportunity that Taylor affords be available to all qualified students," Ray says. "For this reason, I am committed to doing what I can to further the work of Taylor." The Squire Family Trust gift to the endowment fund will do just that.

Rev. Ray Squire, Wasco, California

the Taylor Fund surpassed all previous high water marks, the percentage of alumni involvement has grown not by the 2% projected but by an exciting 8%, and the retention has jumped to almost 90%.

Chicken or egg? Are we sensing new energy and renewed vigor because of these accomplishments, or have we achieved these because the whole family team — students, faculty, staff, parents, alumni, community, and friends — are beginning to pull together? My vote would go overwhelmingly for the power of God the Holy Spirit working through the entire family. All are important! No effort is without value and meaning to the whole. This is biblical — "the body is fitly joined together," all have a function, all are needed, all have value and dignity. Momentum, or as the media people call it "the big Mo," is quotient that often makes the difference. The total becomes more than the sum of the parts when we are unified around our mission and are working together to accomplish real, measurable, worthy goals.

My sincere desire and goal is to appeal to every Taylor constituent, student, parent, alumnus, faculty member, staff person, community leader, philanthropist, or caring friend of youth, to see his or her individual value and importance in carrying out this worthwhile mission. This report is an encouraging example of how important every individual is to the Taylor mission. -- JK

It was through the generous contribution of Don and Bonnie Odle and Dr. and Mrs. Paul Gentile that Taylor University was given 40 acres of wooded farmland which also includes a lake. This contribution was made with the intent that Taylor could either develop this property, which is located just south of the campus, or sell it and use the funds for the Taylor Endowment.

A Life Annuity was made with the Odles so that Bonnie will receive income throughout herr life. Since both the Odle and Gentile children have attended Taylor University, they realized the value of a Christian education.

Bonnie (Weaver '44) & Don Odle '42

It was Clyde and Irene Snell's desire to assist students preparing for either the ministry or medical profession by helping to provide financial assistance; this motivated Mrs. Snell to set up through her Will a way that financial assistance could be provided to students with financial need.

Since Rev. Clyde Snell passed away several years ago, Irene, through her Last Will and Testament, has made possible this assistance. Students who are preparing themselves either for the ministry or for the medical profession will be able to receive financial assistance through Taylor's endowment. Since Rev. Snell was involved in the history and Christian education programs while at Taylor University, Irene wanted to establish a memorial fund in his honor which would help future students gain a valuable Christian education.

Both Rev. Snell and Irene were graduates of the Class of 1932. Irene states, "Both Clyde's and my life were changed while at Taylor due to the quality Christian education. I want this to be a tribute to Clyde which will continue to help present-day students."

Irene Snell, Greenville, South Carolina

Advancement's Report on Giving

by Dr. Charles 'Chip' Jaggers III '69

The greatest joy of being in advancement work is the opportunity to express appreciation for the generous support of alumni, parents, friends, businesses and churches. In the 1986-87 school year, that joy became more evident than ever. "Overwhelming" is the only way to describe your response during this past year; such a response represents a great vote of confidence in Taylor University. Please accept a sincere "thank you" on behalf of all who serve here and on behalf of all the students and faculty who benefitted from your support.

A ministry as large as Taylor University needs a broad base of support. Every gift counts, from large corporate gifts to the widow's mite. Although it sounds trite, we simply could not have achieved such results without your help. You responded faithfully to our letters, our calls, and our visits in record numbers. The result is an exceptional fund-raising year with many highlights.

Highlights

Mentioning several highlights for the year demonstrates in tangible ways why we are so grateful for your response. Our major goal of increased participation was achieved and resulted in the following positive report.

- The number of alumni participating in giving to Taylor University increased by 40%.
- Overall giving to our most critical need, the Taylor Fund, increased by 36% to $741,000.
- Alumni giving to the Taylor Fund increased by 45%.
- Parents giving to the Taylor Fund increased by 156%.
- Our new Church Matching Gift program for student aid brought in $72,000 in its first year.
- Planned and estate gifts increased to $700,000 for the year.
- Gift annuities generated $68,000 in new resources.
- Numerous scholarships were added and existing scholarships increased in value.
- Total giving to the university exceeded $3,000,000 for only the second time in its history.
- Several faculty received grants to help their curricular areas.
- Matching gifts and direct gifts from business and industry increased.
- Gifts from businesses and corporations through the Associated Colleges of Indiana (ACI) increased.

This list represents only the highlights. We received many other blessings too numerous to mention through bequests and gifts-in-kind. Suffice it to say we are thankful for your exceptional response!

Commentary on the Times

This past year was one of controversy relative to fund raising in evangelical organizations. Support for many Christian organizations declined. I have been asked on numerous occasions if Taylor University has been adversely affected; I am pleased to report that our experience has been just the opposite.

We believe this good news was due to two primary factors: 1) a high level of confidence and belief in Taylor, and 2) ethical fund-raising behavior by the university over many years.

With respect to the first point, many individuals have expressed their confidence in President Kesler, our dedicated faculty, and our unwavering commitment to advancing Christ's kingdom through quality higher education. Alumni and friends have on numerous occasions affirmed their support for Taylor's mission. In fact, in a recent poll, 94% of our constituency indicated the number one reason for giving to Taylor was not tax benefit, but belief in the university.

Regarding the ethics of fund raising, Taylor University also has a good record. During this controversial year, many solid Christian organizations have highlighted their affiliation with the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability (ECFA). Taylor is no exception; in fact, Taylor University is a charter member of the ECFA, a part of the original group which founded the organization in 1979.

I also have been asked if recent tax law changes have affected giving to Taylor University. As nearly as we can tell, the answer is no. As mentioned above, over 90% of our donor base indicated that belief in Taylor, not taxes, is the reason for giving. Even where taxes have been a consideration, our experience has been that the new tax law still preserved most of the philanthropic benefits of the past. In fact, the charitable contribution represents one of the few remaining tax benefits still available. In short, we continue to be pleased with the quantity and quality of giving to Taylor University.

A Look to the Future

As we look ahead to 1988, we do so with great optimism. The response to President Kesler's leadership has been tremendous. Our enrollment this year represents the second largest student body in school history; the quality of our academic program is achieving external recognition; the new library continues to be a source of excitement; and, as noted, giving by our alumni and friends has been exceptional. Virtually every aspect of the campus can report progress and qualitative improvement.

In this context, we have set some significant giving goals for 1987-88. To achieve these noble objectives, your continued involvement will be needed. The purpose of this report is gratitude, but a brief reference to our two main goals is in order.

Goal One:
Alumni Participation in Giving

We sincerely wish for each alumnus to participate in giving, regardless of the amount. The smallest gift can still help us achieve this goal. The benefit of such participation not only includes the enjoyment of joining in, but once alums are giving at high percentage levels, foundations, corporations and major donors take note and then are willing to help us, as well.

Goal Two:
Matching Gift Challenge Response

Our second most important goal this year is to achieve an exceptional response to a matching gift challenge. In order to encourage increased giving to the Taylor Fund, an anonymous donor has pledged up to $300,000 in a matching gift challenge for new, unrestricted gifts to Taylor ("new" can be defined as first-time gift or the amount of increase over 1986-87 giving). For each new dollar given, the donor will match the gift, dollar for dollar. The matching gift will go toward remaining expenses associated with the Zondervan Library project.

In conclusion, let me again express appreciation for your gifts in 1986-87. The pages which follow represent our way of acknowledging our gratitude for your many gifts. Through your generosity, the lives of many students and the work of Taylor University have been strengthened and sustained. Thank you. -- CJ

Fund Raising Glossary

Learning the lingo

Alumni Participation: The percentage obtained by dividing the number of alumni donors by the total number of alumni whom we can solicit. Participation at any amount is of critical importance because Taylor's donor base is made up of many small gifts. It is true, every little bit helps. Participation is also important to major donors and corporations who use alumni participation as a gauge for their own level of support.

Balanced Budget: The desire of every college. A balanced budget is possible when gifts and revenues received are equal to or in excess of expenses for the university. Taylor University has recently concluded its 14th straight year of balanced budgets; in 1987-88, with the help of donors, we will have our 15th consecutive balanced budget.

Deferred Giving (also known as Placement Giving): A long-term method of giving in which the benefit to the university is postponed to a future date. Examples include: remembering Taylor in one's will, gifts of life insurance, gift annuities, various charitable trusts, gifts of appreciated property or stock. Most deferred-gift opportunities are designed to help individuals in the area of tax-wise giving. The technical aspects of deferred giving are not as complicated as many people think. However, these mechanisms for giving do require some financial guidance. Taylor University employs a staff of competent deferred-giving officers who can assist individuals in exploring these particular giving options.

Endowment: Gifts placed in a permanent fund which allows only the income earned to be spent. The principal sum (the endowment) is invested by the officers of the university. The Taylor endowment is composed of two major types of endowment: 1) restricted for student aid, and 2) unrestricted to help with the operating costs of the institution. The primary source of endowment funds are bequests and special gifts. Taylor's endowment is seven million dollars.

Fiscal Year: The financial year for the university. The fiscal year runs from July 1 to June 30. On June 30, accounts are balanced. For donor tax records, giving is shown on a calendar year. However, fund-raising campaigns run July 1 to June 30 for budgetary reasons. The report in this magazine is based on the fiscal year ending June 30, 1987.

Matching Gifts: Participating companies match (sometimes up to four times) the amount of dollars given by their employees to institutions. The company matches a gift after the donor has sent in his/her gift to a selected institution and when he/she indicates a desire to have that gift matched. Normally, an employee sends in a company matching gift form along with his/her personal gift to the institution. These forms can be obtained from the personnel office of most matching gift companies. The process is an effective and relatively simple way for Taylor alumni, parents and friends to increase their gifts by as much as four-fold. Last year, Taylor received $92,415 in matching gifts. Questions on matching gifts can be answered by contacting Steve Manganello in the Taylor Advancement Office.

President's Associates: A group of individuals on whom the honor "associate" is bestowed based on an unrestricted gift of $1,000 or more in a single fiscal year. This group provides a vital base of support for the university.

Restricted Gift: A gift where the donor requests a selected use for the gift. Samples of restricted gifts include scholarships, memorial funds, endowments, or special projects. Gifts in honor of a professor or in recognition of a favorite academic department are further examples.

Taylor Fund: The single most important vehicle for giving to Taylor University. Gifts to the fund are given unrestricted by alumni, friends, parents, faculty, trustees, students, corporations, families, and foundations. A tradition of loyalty to Taylor, the fund represents the one fund-raising effort in which we would like to see 100% participation.

Unrestricted Gift: A gift made without any designated condition for its expenditure. Gifts to the Taylor Fund are unrestricted. Unrestricted gifts are the most important gifts Taylor University can receive because they allow the university freedom to expend funds where they are needed most. Unrestricted giving enables us to keep the cost of tuition lower. — CJ

President's Associates:

Encouraging 'ownership' in Taylor University

The President's Associates of Taylor University was introduced as a means of recognizing the university's major donors and encouraging "ownership" in the university by her alumni and friends. Each year individuals and married couples who contribute unrestricted gifts totaling $1,000 or more are counted as President's Associates.

Beyond the New Testament blessings bestowed on supporters of His work, Taylor University has added some benefits of its own:

President's Associates plaque — a lovely statement of Taylor University's appreciation done in regal wood, gold and purple with wording that strongly identifies the donor with Christian higher education.

President's Gold Card — issued annually, the card affords the holder free admission to all campus events, compliments of President Jay Kesler.

President's Associates dinner — a gala celebration planned each year to express Taylor University's gratefulness to the President's Associates.

At the close of the fiscal 1986-87 fiscal year, the President's Associates of Taylor University totaled 222. -- SM

Students are calling on you to provide assistance at Taylor

by Sharon Wit '87

It's a Tuesday evening sometime during spring and your phone rings.

"Hello, may I speak to Mr. or Mrs. Alumni, please? Hi, this is a Taylor Student, and I'm here in the administration building at Taylor University with several other students calling alumni and friends of the university on behalf of the Taylor Fund . . . ."

Yes, the phone call reminds you that it is that time of year again, but before you hang up, there are some things that you should know about the Phonathon and the role it plays at Taylor University.

I have been involved in Taylor's Phonathon in just about every role possible — from student caller to student assistant and now as a development professional. I have experienced firsthand what a student caller feels while making calls; I know how you, the Taylor University alumnus or friend, feels about being called; most importantly, I realize the significant contribution the Phonathon makes to the university through the Taylor Fund.

Each spring, students gather around twelve phones in the alumni office of the administration building. They spend their evenings over the next three or four weeks calling alumni and friends of Taylor University.

Alumni and friends play a major role in the life of Taylor University. The institution contacts you because we need the support of each member of our "family" in order for our goals to be met. Every gift, large or small, is a vital contribution. More important than the amount of your Phonathon gift is the value of your participation. The greater the percentage of alumni support, the greater the support available to Taylor University from outside sources.

We have students call, not administrators, because they are the best people we know to "sell" Taylor University. These kids can tell you firsthand of what is happening here. It's their enthusiasm for Taylor University that keeps them on the phones, for it's not easy to make calls.

I remember my first call. I was so nervous that I almost hung up after two rings. But I soon found that the person on the other end was just as enthusiastic about Taylor as I was; we had a great conversation and I got a pledge. Remember, we are not asking for big bucks; we are asking for you to share in Taylor University. It is a big boost for the students calling you to know that you believe in Taylor, too! And you get the chance to have a personal contact with Taylor. We all benefit from the conversation.

The most common question I have been asked on the phone concerns why a person should give to the Taylor Fund and not to a program of special interest. The reason is that the Taylor Fund subsidizes just about every program on campus; in essence, because of Taylor Fund support, each student this year is charged $704 less than the actual cost of attending Taylor University. So your contribution to the Taylor Fund is really a gift to many special programs.

I hope I've helped give you a better picture of the Taylor Phonathon. Remember, this spring when the phone rings and Taylor Student is on the line (or maybe even me!), don't get frustrated — get excited and share in Taylor University!

Sharon Wit '87 is associate director for development at Taylor University; her primary responsibility is the Taylor Fund. She has been involved with Phonathon at Taylor University as a student caller and student director and now will provide professional guidance for student callers during this spring's Phonathon.

"Alumni and friends play a major role in the life of Taylor University. The institution contacts you because we need the support of each member of our 'family' in order for our goals to be met."

The Constitution, Christianity, and the liberal arts education

by Dr. Oliver F. Hubbard, Jr.

"We are essentially spiritual and ultimately eternal beings who have been given the awesome privilege of participating in and determining our own destinies and the destinies of others."

The mission statement of this institution reads in part: "Taylor University offers liberal arts and professional training based upon the conviction that all truth has its source in God." Professional training is an expressed part of the mission at Taylor. We view the preparation of young people to compete successfully in the job market as an important part of a Taylor education, ordained by God. The dignity of work cannot be despised. As a result, we have created rather extensive programs of professional training within the academic curriculum, as well as in the area of career development. We are concerned about our students' marketability upon graduation and the need to prepare them with marketable skills.

And yet, within a Christian liberal arts college such as ours, there is a necessary and important tension that must always exist between the students' need for professional training and their need for a liberal arts education. We must always keep reminding ourselves that we are more than utilitarian beings; we are more than the job we hold or the function we perform in society. As complexly-created human beings, our purpose is beyond function and our worth is beyond utility. We are essentially spiritual and ultimately eternal beings who have been given the awesome privilege of participating in determining our own destinies and the destinies of others. We have been created both free and responsible — and as free and responsible persons, we have been commissioned to actively participate in the society to which we belong. That participation obviously includes the jobs that we hold; but it extends beyond that to the role we need to play as citizens in a democracy that advocates the ideal of "liberty and justice for all."

The liberal arts are essential to the development of a responsive and responsible citizenry. Liberal arts literally means "arts befitting a free person." As we cannot afford to dismiss the need for professional training for jobs and careers, neither can we afford to dismiss the need for liberal education. Literature, history, philosophy, language, science — these must not become viewed as troublesome requirements to be "gotten out of the way," or bothersome detours that simply impede our travel along the road to marketability. Rather, we must foster within our academic communities the joy and excitement of liberal learning — life-long learning — as our mission statement claims.

In recent months we have seen a growing popular interest in the shortcomings of higher education in this country. The crux of the controversy is actually conveyed in the sub-title of Allan Bloom's best seller, The Closing of the American Mind, or "How higher education has failed democracy and impoverished the souls of today's students." This is quite an indictment, and we must carefully monitor the degree to which this indictment is true of higher education at Taylor.

Beginning this fall and continuing through 1991, our nation will be celebrating the bicentennial of our Constitution. There was no Bill of Rights attached to this Constitution, but the underlying premise of personal, individual liberty was referenced by the Committee of Style and Arrangement in the Preamble to the Constitution. It was made clear in this preamble that the government being formed received its ordination from the people and that one of the essential motivations for the establishment of this government was to "secure the blessings of liberty" for those people and for their posterity.

Dr. Oliver F. Hubbard, Jr., is associate professor of communication arts and director of theatre at Taylor University and was named Distinguished Professor Award winner at the 1987 awards convocation. "The Constitution, Christianity, and the liberal arts" is drawn from Dr. Hubbard's address to the faculty and student body, "To Secure the Blessings of Liberty," during the fall, 1987, academic convocation at Taylor University.

Memories of giving to Taylor slice through six decades

by Dr. Earl Allen '28

There were only 30 of us in the Class of '28, but we loved Taylor so much that we had ambitious ideas as to what we would like to do for our alma mater when it came time to decide upon our graduation gift. Our president, Don Lewis, called us together for a brain storming session, and we finally decided on not just one, but three class projects.

Prof. Theodora Bothwell of the music department convinced us that Taylor desperately needed a pipe organ. We recruited Taylor alumnus Dr. Melvin J. Hill, well-known for his musical prowess, to be our organ architect. He secured the services of the Tellers-Kent Organ Company of Erie, Pennsylvania, to build a three-manual pipe organ. We pooled our meager savings, solicited all of the relatives and friends we dared approach, and finally dedicated our organ with the professional help of a blind organist from Indianapolis. This organ served numerous Taylor music students for many years.

The second Class of '28 project was inspired by the matchless prayer life and example of Sammy Morris, the African youth who came to Taylor when it was still located in Fort Wayne, and who uniquely inspired those who knew or heard about him. Pneumonia tragically wiped out the promising life of this angelic young Taylor student. But the printed story of his child-like prayer life and faith brought an average of 500 pilgrims to his grave in Fort Wayne's Lindenwood Cemetery every year.

The fact that Sammy's poorly-marked grave was in an obscure, segregated section of the cemetery touched our classmates' hearts, and we agreed to change this lamentable situation. We obtained a promise from the cemetery authorities to reinter Sammy's remains in a more prominent and accessible location if we could secure an appropriate headstone for the new grave. Our classmates formed several gospel teams which conducted services in numerous churches, including several black churches in Fort Wayne, and received special offerings for the Sammy Morris Monument Fund.

Visitors to Sammy's grave now read this inscription on the attractive granite monument:

SAMUEL MORRIS
1873-1893
PRINCE KABOO
Native of West Africa
Famous Christian Mystic, Apostle of Simple Faith, Exponent of the Spirit-Filled Life.
Student at Taylor University 1892-3, Fort Wayne, now located at Upland, Indiana.
The story of his life a vital contribution to the development of Taylor University.

The erection of this memorial was sponsored by the 1928 Class of Taylor University and funds were contributed by Fort Wayne Citizens.

The third project of the class likewise had to do with the life and influence of Sammy Morris. Jorge Masa, our classmate from the Philippines, enthusiastically promoted the idea that the time was ripe for a new biography of the famous Christian from Africa. After much persuasion Jorge agreed to take on this challenge himself.

Several of his 1928 classmates helped Jorge gather material and edit Angel in Ebony , the unique title of his Sammy Morris biography. The Sammy Morris story was eventually made into a movie which carried the same title as Masa's book and enjoyed a wide distribution.

Dr. Earl Allen '28 was class gift chairman for the graduates of 1928 at Taylor University; his wife Frances (Thomas '28) has kept a Round-Robin Letter flying between classmates since they graduated nearly six decades ago and presented the Taylor Memorabilia Society with three albums filled with class pictures and mementoes at the 50-year class reunion in 1978. Dr. Allen is a retired Methodist minister.

1884:

Wendell Willkie's parents married at Taylor

DID YOU KNOW that when Taylor University was located in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and known as Fort Wayne College, a graduate of the Class of 1884 was to achieve immortal fame?

Herman Frederick Willkie was born in Germany in 1857; his parents immigrated to the United States in 1861 and became farmers near Fort Wayne. Willkie enrolled at Fort Wayne College due to the low cost of tuition, as did his brother Paul. Herman Wilkie accepted Christ as his saviour while in college and became a powerful witness for Christ until the end of his life.

Willkie married Henrietta Trish in 1887 in the school parlour with the wedding performed by Dr. Wilbur Yocum, president of the school at that time. A few years after graduation, the Willkies settled permanently in Elwood, Indiana. Herman Willkie was an educator and later an attorney; Henrietta was an attorney as well and was the first woman admitted to the State Bar of Indiana. All four of the couple's sons achieved success in their chosen careers.

Herman and Henrietta's son Wendell Willkie gained one of the highest honors any person can achieve in this nation. He was nominated by the Republican party in 1940 as its candidate for the presidency. Wendell Willkie had gained national prominence as a corporation lawyer and business consultant. In the presidential election, he ran a close race against incumbent Franklin Roosevelt, but lost. Roosevelt was so impressed with Willkie, however, that he asked him to undertake a world-wide fact-finding tour in preparation for the problems that would emerge in the post-war era. Many of Willkie's insights gained on this trip were adopted as government policy after the war. Willkie's outstanding book, One World, became a classic guide in the formulation of American foreign policy.

All of the Willkie boys attributed their achievements to the Christian example set for them by their parents. How much may Taylor University have contributed to this in the molding of Herman's student days at Taylor? Could this type of influence be one reason for Taylor's continual existence?

U.S. Presidents peruse first Taylor yearbook

DID YOU KNOW that the first copy of the GEM, Taylor University's first yearbook, came out in 1898, five years after the college had moved from Fort Wayne to Upland? Copies of the publication were sent to such luminaries as former Presidents Benjamin Harrison and Grover Cleveland as well as incumbent President William McKinley for their perusal. Three years later, McKinley was to become our third martyred President; he was known for his personal piety and deep faith in Christ.

All three of the men listed above responded to the copies of the GEM sent to them. The response from President McKinley speaks for itself:

"In my late trouble with Spain, I found no one book that contained as much valuable information which would help in the great question of war and government as the '98 Class Book of Taylor University. Your committee will receive the thanks of the whole nation for this valuable contribution. Reading it, one finds comfort in every trouble, strength in every hour of anxiety, and sunshine all the time."

Yours,

Wm. McKinley, President of the United States

Pictured above are the men who created a yearbook about which former President Grover Cleveland said, "No library will be complete without it." Staff of the 1898 Gem were (left to right) D.S. Duncan, associate editor; L.R. Schrader, business manager; S.P. Jamgotchian, associate editor; G.W. Anderson, editor-in-chief; and D.C. Eberhart, associate editor.

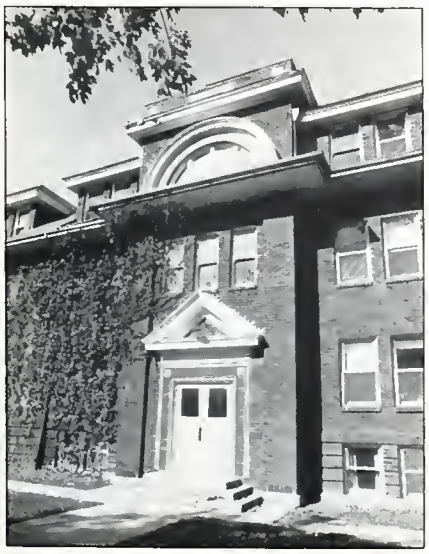
Swallow-Robin named for Prohibition candidate

DID YOU KNOW that Swallow-Robin residence hall was named for a Presidential candidate and his wife? During the administration of President Monroe Vayhinger at Taylor University (1908-21), a new girls' dormitory became a necessity. Dr. Silas C. Swallow was a minister in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. He and his wife, whose maiden name was Robin, became interested in the dorm project and agreed to aid substantially in the erection of the proposed residence hall. It was named Swallow-Robin in honor of the first donors.

Dr. Swallow's interest in Taylor University went back to the Fort Wayne era. Known during his career as the "Fighting Parson" who opposed dancing, liquor and tobacco, Swallow was nominated in 1904 as the Prohibition Party candidate for President. In the election, he received 285,950 votes, the highest total ever received by a Prohibition Party presidential candidate.

During the Vayhinger years, the Prohibition movement was at its zenith. Taylor University had taken a strong anti-liquor stance, especially because of Mrs. Culla Vayhinger's work and prominence in the Prohibition movement and her acquaintance with the Swallow family. Both she and Dr. Burt Ayres, one of Taylor University's most revered professors, were Prohibition Party candidates for public office during these years.

Dr. Swallow died in 1930 at the age of 91. The New York Times paid him this tribute: "The 'Fighting Parson' was probably one of the most ardent enemies of liquor, etc., this country has ever seen."



Swallow-Robin hall (left) still stands today, although it was closed as a residence facility following the 1985-86 school year. It is one of only two buildings built before 1950 which remain structurally the same as when originally built, the other being Sickler Hall, erected in 1902-03, which faces Swallow-Robin across Reade Avenue.

Wheels sang on steps of Capitol Building

DID YOU KNOW that the Wandering Wheels team sang before President Lyndon B. Johnson at the White House in 1966? They had also performed before former President Harry S. Truman.

The Wandering Wheels bicycle program was established in 1964 by Coach Bob Davenport to offer young people experiences that would combine adventure and physical vigor with Christian fellowship and witness. Over the years, the Wheels program has grown in popularity. Utilizing bicycles in personal and group ministry, trips have expanded to the point that coast-to-coast treks are routine. Cycling trips in other countries have added much to the program and its purpose. The unusual nature of the Wheels trips has helped bring the program wide publicity.

Another innovative program of Taylor University has brought God's continued favor and blessing to the institution for His honor and glory.

The cover of the fall, 1966, Taylor University Magazine captured the Wandering Wheels group on the steps of the Capitol Building in Washington, D.C. up by several members of the admissions staff.

"This is my first year on the job and I love it !" says Gretchen Burwick, a sophomore. "It doesn't really take up much of my time, but it does keep me busy. I think we have a group of quality people this year, and it's been great getting to know them."

According to Frye, there is strong competition for a spot on the Personal Touch staff because students are proud to represent their school. Twice as many students applied this year, compared to last year, although only half as many positions were available. Two of the qualities the admissions staff members look for are assertiveness and a desire to share with others their experiences at Taylor University.

Senior staff include Joel Durkovic, Brad Newlin, Rob Muthiah, Mike Bubp, Kimberley Stephens, Lori McGuffin and Ginny DeMerchant. -- PT

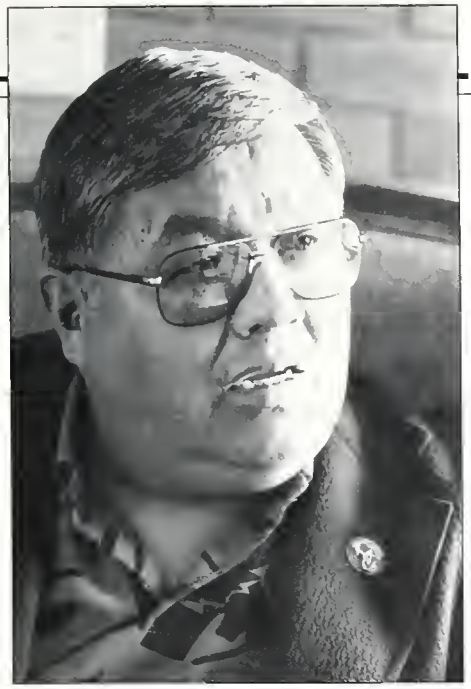
Our national conscience should be seared with the notion of liberty: "Give me liberty or give me death;" "All men are created equal... endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights...among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" "One nation under God with liberty and justice for all." We are known as the "land of the free." As a nation we have heralded the ideal of individual liberty, despite the fact that in reality we have often denied the full blessings of liberty to all. But the ideal that individual liberty is not a benefit bestowed on us by government, but is a prior human right ordained by God himself, is one that we as Christians can embrace.

There is no perfect government, and I am not one who would endorse the idea that the United States is a Christian nation. I do believe that the responsibilities of citizenship are ours as Christians regardless of the form of government under which we find ourselves. And certainly one of our responsibilities as a Christian liberal arts college is to prepare men and women to fully participate in the social and political agenda of our time. The issues that face our nation and our world today, those that will face today's students in the years ahead, are complex and often contradictory in nature. There are few simple solutions. In the establishment of the Constitution itself there was extensive, divisive, and heated debate on each article. Compromise was necessary — even when it came to such a foundational concept as liberty. When those delegates to the Constitutional Convention signed that document and sent it to the states to be ratified, the full blessings of liberty which it endorsed were enjoyed by only a small percentage of the population. Native Americans, slaves and women were denied full participatory rights.

In the last two hundred years, however, the people have carried on the campaign to insure that those blessings of liberty guaranteed by the Constitution would be extended to them and to the posterity. We had to endure a costly civil war which left President Lincoln questioning at Gettysburg whether a nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal could long endure. But we did endure; slavery was abolished and Black men were guaranteed the right to vote in 1866. It was not until 1920 that women were extended those same rights — and the struggle to achieve equal rights under the Constitution continues even to this day.

As Christians who are citizens of this nation, we need to be a part of that struggle. We will without doubt differ in our interpretation of and position on the issues, but the debate cannot be abandoned. Even within the relatively narrow ranks of evangelicals we will differ on the issues of abortion, the equal rights amendment, disarmament, Nicaragua, South Africa — but we must not allow our differences to render us indifferent. The liberty that we enjoy as human beings we recognize as having its source in our Creator, who, in his own image, chose to make us free and responsible. That dignity of choice extended even to the acceptance or rejection of Christ himself.

A liberal arts education is an education befitting a free person. During this period of national celebration, I hope that through our studies at Taylor University we will each learn more clearly the role we can and should play in securing the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. – OH



Rev. Fred Yazzie '62

Rev. Fred Yazzie ministers to the needs of his Navajo people

Fred Yazzie was born on a reservation in Shiprock, New Mexico, 48 years ago. While attending school at the Navajo Methodist Mission High School in Farmington, Yazzie accepted the Christian faith and felt called to the minstry.

" At first, it really hurt because my parents thought I was in peyote (a cactus button which induces hallucinations when ingested)," Yazzie says. "Of course, Christianity had nothing to do with it. They gradually understood what it was, but it was really hard in the beginning of my spiritual life."

He attended Taylor University and was graduated in 1958 with a degree in sociology and a minor in religion. During his years at Taylor, Yazzie excelled in cross country; this sport won him the Most Valuable Player award his freshman year.

A scholarship from Asbury Theological Seminary enabled Yazzie to obtain his divinity degree, making him the first Navajo to receive such training.

"Unfortunately, too many of the Navajos from the United Methodist Churches are not ordained. It takes a lot of dedication and commitment to obtain the necessary requirements to become a full fledged minister," Yazzie explains, "and most are content with the training they receive from missionaries."

Yazzie is one of nine Navajo pastors serving the Four Corners Native American Minstry of the United Methodist Church. It was founded 10 years ago to establish churches in the reservation, recruit Navajo workers and build facilities. This ministry covers an area of 25,000 square miles and spills into New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Colorado; it reaches 200,000 Navajos.

As co-pastor of the UMC in Shiprock, Yazzie spends most of his time counseling couples with marital problems as well as Navajo youths whose biggest problem is trying to reconcile a poverty-stricken family background with a materialistic society.

"They don't know which society they belong to — the one out there that seems to have so many things to offer or the one they are living in now," Yazzie says. "This leads to a lot of frustration and many of our youths turn to drink."

Besides working at Shiprock, Yazzie also ministers in a church in Ojo-amarillo, 17 miles away. He visits numerous United Methodist Churches in the United States as a mission interpreter and tells people about the Four Corners ministry. He also teaches Native American studies and has been involved in a tape ministry to Nigeria and Ghana, Africa, for the past four years.

"One thing that I am really excited about in the near future is my invitation to go to Sierre Leone to visit different churches there," Yazzie says. "We'll be distributing bibles and food and also hold evangelistic meetings."

Yazzie and his wife Carol, also a Navajo, have been married since 1964 and have four children: Gaylon, Theron, Shannon and Jason. -- PT

Rev. Case shares with the audience after receiving his honorary doctorate.

Rev. Riley Case presented with honorary degree

Rev. Riley B. Case '56 was awarded an honorary doctorate by Taylor University during the summer Good News Convention held in Upland.

Rev. Case was honored for his demonstration of effective leadership and redemptive influence in the United Methodist Church. A leader and strong evangelical presence in the Northern Indiana Conference of the UMC, Rev. Case was named a district superintendent three years ago.

Perhaps most notably, he was influential in founding Good News, a forum for evangelical thought within the Methodist church, 20 years ago. Rev. Case is a frequent writer for the publication and serves on its board of directors.

His wife Ruth (Unkenholz '57) is a graduate of Taylor University, as are three of the couple's four children.

Rev. Robert 'Tiny' Davis '58 holds on to faith while battling deadly Alzheimer's disease

by Charles Whited
Miami Herald

'To everything there is a season, a time for every purpose under heaven, a time to be born, and a time to die . . .'
— Ecclesiastes

"The greatest fear I have with this disease is what it does to your personality. Pray that I be spared part of this personality change which I would have no control over. Pray that I in no way might inadvertently disgrace the Lord or this church or the people whom I love." – Rev. Bob Davis

He's a big man, baldish and bespectacled now but standing 6-7 at 280 pounds. When he finished college, they wanted Bob Davis to shore up the Chicago Bears defensive line. He chose the ministry instead. He does more than fill a pulpit, he overwhelms it, surrounded by the soaring modernity of the church built largely from his personality and drive.

How do you measure one man's force of personality?

Fifteen years ago when he was new to the job, Old Cutler Presbyterian Church was a mission, no more. On a typical Sabbath 29 people came to Sunday School and 46 to church, if it didn't rain. These days you'll find 800 in Sunday school and 1,200 in church. With 2,400 actual members, Old Cutler is one of the largest Presbyterian churches in America.

That's one way you measure, by the tangibles.

And then there are the intangibles.

What Dr. Robert Davis did for four consecutive August Sundays, and the emotional impact of his personal crisis on the congregation, are all intangibles.

For three Sundays straight he devoted sermons to his own life, his imperfections and inner hungers and work. He talked about an impoverished boyhood in Ohio, with a widowed mother who constantly took him to a little country church. He talked about how he was nothing, "a no-talent person," dissatisfied with life and lusting for money, clothes, a car, and how ultimately he found Jesus — that is, deep down inside, where faith lives — while working as a plumber's helper, cleaning out a sewer trap . . . .

It went on like that, mingling passion and eloquence and simplicity.

And some of them wept.

He couldn't preach a regular sermon any more, you see, not the kind interweaving clever logic and abstract symbolisms, tied into Holy Writ. His mind had gone too foggy for that, with thoughts drifting and colliding and sometimes vanishing. So he told stories, stories like how he spurned the chance to play football for the Chicago Bears as a gigantic ministerial student at a small Indiana Bible college, building up his muscles working on a garbage truck.

Listen:

"I knew I had no talent for the ministry. But I'd been raised on the Ten Commandments, which said to remember the Sabbath day. I went out and walked around the woods for three days, praying. I knew good Christians I admired who were pro football players, but it went against my conscience that my life would be dedicated to playing one o'clock Sunday games that would pull weak Christians out of eleven o'clock worship service on the Lord's day, that the Lord had said to keep holy . . . .

"So I turned it down."

He turned it down in the same way he had turned down athletic scholarships at big time sports universities, and the way he abandoned his own youthful, aggressive enterprise that would have made him rich. He went instead to ministerial schools to be poor and follow a life of service, in quest of faith. "A no-talent person for Jesus," he called himself.

In the third of his climactic sermons, delivered after a doctor's final diagnosis came in, Davis gave his shocked congregation the news.

He has Alzheimer's disease. It is wasting away his brain, the brain that could sop up information like a sponge and was at a genius level in mathematics.

He is quitting the ministry.

He would submit his resignation to the church's governing board of laymen, the Session, and presiding clerk Steven Trescott and ask that a new minister be named. And this he did.

And so on Sunday, August 2, Bob Davis preached his final sermon at the 11 a.m. service in the church at 14401 Old Cutler Road, the church that has always had its pastor's stamp uniquely upon it, conservative and close-knit; the church that people cannot conceive of without him.

"He is such a loving, caring person," said Ray Goode, a lay leader.

"Old Cutler is my life, my family, my joy and the place where love is," Davis said in his third sermon.

He told them of how his wife Betty (Godsey '58) and their two grown daughters, Debby and Becky, are coping. And he talked about what to expect with Alzheimer's, which rarely strikes anyone so relatively young.

"This is a disease which gradually destroys the brain. It is already in effect. I can no longer read a book. My mathematical ability is at the third-grade level . . . ."

He asked for their prayers and for their understanding.

"The greatest fear I have with this disease is what it does to your personality. It makes you angry, ugly, obscene, paranoid, cursing and very difficult to handle before you become comatose. Pray that I be spared part of this personality change which I would have no control over. Pray that I in no way might inadvertently disgrace the Lord or this church or the people whom I love.

"Pray for Betty, as I turn my guardianship over to her and she has to run our lives. I will not suffer nearly as much as she does.

"And please have patience with me. My mind is sort of like a sieve. There may be times when I cannot function. When that happens, just remember one thing: Bob Davis doesn't live in his body any more, just his body is there; Bob Davis, the guy inside, he was so tender and loved Jesus so much.

"Finally, when I get to that stage where my mind is gone, pray the Lord will just take me home quickly. Why should I remain mindless and helpless on this earth when I could be enjoying all that's heaven?

"The glory of being with Jesus makes me gasp for joy."

His faith, he said, is unshaken, and even stronger. Davis has never minced words about religion; he has kept the church grounded in the Bible and rock-like principles. "Yet he's modern enough," says Goode, "to keep up with the times, and the complex living environment of Miami these days. It's that combination that makes him so special."

"Christ is answering my prayers," Bob Davis said. "In God's will is our peace. I love and serve Him.

"Please remember me the way I was."

COLLAGE OF GUESTS & HONORS

Carmen Taylor (right), director of records, was awarded an honorary degree by President Kesler during September's academic convocation. Bill Moyer (below, left), former commentator for CBS now with PBS, queried Rev. Edwin Robb, UMC evangelist and spokesman for the Institute of Religion and Democracy, during the summer's Good News Conference.

Greg Speck (below) led the fall Spiritual Renewal Week services – despite being hindered by a flu bug that attacked not only Taylor University's guest, but most of its campus residents, as well. Ralph Boyd (bottom) served Taylor University as director of maintenance and grounds for many years; a picnic for Ralph Boyd was held in September on the grounds of the President's House, during which time the maintenance building was officially named in honor of Ralph Boyd.

President Jay Kesler (above) helped Iris Abbey '15 celebrate her 95th birthday in September; she is Taylor University's oldest graduate. Jerry Nelson (left) has served thousands upon thousands of meals in the Hodson Dining Commons as its director – but the surprise was on him when a dinner was held in his honor during October, complete with gifts of appreciation for his countless hours of work.

DOUBLE YOUR DOLLARS

AN UNPRECEDENTED OPPORTUNITY . . .

Never in the history of Taylor University has there been an opportunity exactly like this one. This year, we have the chance to multiply the impact of your gift two-fold, and in many cases three-fold, and even higher.

A Matching Gift Challenge from an anonymous donor has been given in order to encourage both new gifts or increased gifts to Taylor.

The challenge states that a major donor will match dollar-for-dollar every new, unrestricted dollar raised by Taylor during the 1987-88 school year. For each new, unrestricted dollar given, the challenger will give one dollar toward remaining expenses associated with the Zondervan Library project.

A new dollar is defined as either the amount of increase over last year's giving or a new gift from those who did not give during the previous school year. The challenge amount available is $300,000.

Your gift can be multiplied further if you work for a matching gift company. Companies tend to match employee gifts dollar-for-dollar. In many cases, corporate matches exceed a one-for-one match. In light of the challenge above, a single gift would be tripled. Check with your personnel office or call Steve Manganello (1-800-TU2-2345 [Indiana] or 1-800-TU2-3456 [nation-wide]) at Taylor University if you want to know whether or not your company matches gifts.

For Indiana residents, a further incentive exists from the state to encourage gifts to higher education. Indiana residents can receive up to $200 in tax credit on state income tax for a gift to Taylor (i.e., $200 for those filing jointly, $100 for single individuals). Forms and details are available by writing to the Advancement Office, Attention: Brian Christy, Taylor University, Upland, IN 46989.

The challenge expires June 30, 1988.
Your participation is greatly encouraged — this opportunity is simply too important to miss!

Rice Bell Towers Under Construction, A Cloudy Morning

Behind them a navy-gray sky frowns: the battleship world is lost in gray mist.

Like masts in the dark sky, the towers stretch upward. Spirit — and mind, its partner — point beyond navy-gray clouds of stormy earth. Red brick punctuated with darker red and brown and slanted white in beauty clothes the concrete cores planted in the solid earth.

The brick layers work downward, dressing like a gift from above the sturdy cores — tower of learning with its base in earth, tower of faith rooted in creation's actuality.
Beauty added from above clings to the necessary cores.

At the towers' tops, joining, yet floating in the space between, the carillon cage's grillwork waits. Sounds of modern faith, electronic voices poised, expectant.
